STATEMENT

By Ana Romero, Manager Director of the Family Institute at the Sabana University in Colombia and VicePresident of Redifam a network in Latin American Universities.

We offer an online master in Family Counseling and work on research areas like: Domestic violence, Work and family balance, disability, young people lifestyles, Poverty and Gender among others.

Each semester, undergraduate students’ study at our core curriculum program how to build their life project.

Our investigations (research) shows: necessary communication strategies that promote more participation on unpaid domestic and care work.

To reduce domestic violence, more education is needed, and frequently cultural aspects can be barriers for changes.

We need more international academic studies for public policy guidelines. For that, there is a need of working together and having special funds for investigation and helping professors in Latin American countries to have access of PhD programs.
